Our Theory of Action

We believe that the systemic inequities within the education system reflect the inequities within our larger society and that education grantmakers should invest in solutions that address root causes. As Grantmakers for Education, we must maintain our direct focus on education issues, while making connections to larger systemic challenges that shape students' opportunities to learn and thrive.

Our Key Strategies

This commitment guides our support for changes in education philanthropy. It shows up as building staff, board and member capacity and elevates diverse member voices.

Our programming serves as a platform for deeper learning and connection among members. We focus on building skills, knowledge and relationships that support members who invest in systems change in education.

We analyze cross-network trends and engage in partnerships to strengthen funders' commitments to education and their capacity to move the field forward.

Our Staff

We have a small but mighty staff located strategically throughout the country, bringing diverse backgrounds and a wealth of experience to our mission. We are led by Executive Director Nicole Rodriguez Leach, who has forged the way in equity and justice for over two decades through her leadership in philanthropy, nonprofits and education.
